

DOROTHY DIX REPORTS MOHR TRIAL FOR BOSTON AMERICAN

Mrs. Mohr belongs essentially to the neglected-wife sort of women that are as pitiful as they are common. Generally, this kind of woman lacks the courage to even resent the wrongs she suffers, and sits supinely down to enjoy a morbid misery. Occasionally, however, the worm does turn, and, like other weak and helpless creatures when driven to bay, takes a revenge as ferocious as it is unexpected. — From article by DOROTHY DIX on page 3

Allies Demand Greece Break With Teutons

COERCION OF GREECE BY ALLIES

Entente Powers Give Athens 48 Hours to Break with Teutons, Says a Dispatch from Sofia

By International News Service.

London, Jan. 18.—France and England, according to a dispatch received in Berlin today from Sofia, have served an ultimatum upon Greece, giving that country forty-eight hours to sever diplomatic relations with the central powers and their allies. Failure to comply with the demand, the dispatch adds, will result in necessary measures being taken by the entente allies. The Sofia message, made public today by the Overseas News Agency, in Berlin, says: "Reports from Athens state that England and France have presented to the Greek government a demand that it will be impossible for the enemy to exploit them."

WHITTIER DIARY SAYS DEAD GIRL WAS WIFE

Providence, Jan. 18.—In a diary found among the effects of Crawford K. Whittier, who murdered Melissa M. Budding, when his attentions were rejected, is a note to the effect that the couple were married in Attleboro, "two months ago."

The city clerk of Attleboro has no record of such marriage. The diary also recorded a quarrel with the young woman Saturday night after which she threw the wedding ring across the room, saying, "she was through."

BODIES OF MEXICANS SHOWN

Remains of Rodriguez and Baca-Valles, Villistas Connected with Massacre, Exhibited in Juarez

JOHN W. ROBERTS

International News Service Staff Correspondent.

El Paso, Tex., Jan. 18.—With his back to a cottonwood tree, behind which his hands were tightly bound with heavy rope, Colonel Miguel Baca-Valles, official executioner of the Villa army, was shot to death in Juarez by a Carranza firing squad at 5 a. m. today.

The execution took place at a point 100 yards from the national railway station, where there stood a special train filled with American refugees from Mexico which had arrived a few hours earlier.

BACA-VALLES NOTICED. The colonel was put to death after conviction by a court-martial on the charge of having taken part in the massacre of American citizens near Santa Ysabel a week ago Monday.

While Baca-Valles was being executed the body of General Jose Rodriguez, Villista leader, lay in a freight car near by, awaiting the hour set by the Carranza officials for his execution in the Juarez railway station as a warning to all Mexicans that American lives must be respected in Mexico. Rodriguez was executed last week near Matamoros.

Colonel Baca-Valles met his death with a stoicism characteristic of his Indian ancestry. Knowing that he was doomed to death immediately after his arrival in Juarez, he smoked cigarettes incessantly during the night, but the only words uttered by him in the hearing of his guards were: "May God be merciful to me!"

In the darkest hour of the morning just before dawn, Baca-Valles

Temperature to Remain Low, So Forecaster Says

The Weather Man looked over his books and his instruments today, and he scratched his head and he said: "Well, I guess it'll be generally fair to-night and Wednesday. Wind ought to get around into the west. Not much change in temperature."
"What do you mean—no much change?" His visitor inquired.
"Oh, it'll stay between fourteen and twenty. With a nice, brisk, cold wind. But folks on the street called the wind something else, as they moved, up their coat collars and rubbed their ears to life."

Constable Swears Brown Said Woman Threatened "To Do It Herself" if Plot Was a Failure

PROVIDENCE, Jan. 18.—Mrs. Elizabeth F. Mohr told Cecil Victor Brown that her husband, Dr. C. Frank Mohr, must be killed on the night of August 31, and that if Brown did not do it, she would have to do it herself, according to a confession of Brown's testified today by Constable James E. Wallace of Barrington.

The witness testified further: "Chief O'Neill said: 'Did Mrs. Mohr promise you $200 to kill Dr. Mohr?' Brown said 'Yes.' The Chief said: 'And did she give you a motorcycle or $100 to buy a?' Brown said 'Yes.'"

Constable Wallace corroborated previous testimony regarding the confessions of the witness to the effect that Mrs. Mohr had offered them $200 to kill her husband.

TOLD OF MURDER PLOT.

Wallace further testified that Chief O'Neill and Brown: "Did Mrs. Mohr give you $200 to go to Boston to buy the revolver?" and Brown said "Yes."

Wallace testified that he asked Brown: "Was she meaning Mrs. Mohr give you any money?" and that Brown replied, "Yes, she was giving me money all the time. She paid me $100 for my face to Newport to kill her doctor."

Spelman, Wallace sworn, confessed that he had Mrs. Mohr, saying: "I saw her coming out of the car and I shot her."

This was the most amazing confession by Mrs. Mohr that the prosecution has introduced since the reopening of the trial on Monday.

The state also went into testimony as introduced showing that Brown had arrived in Barrington on his motorcycle as soon after the shooting of Dr. Mohr in Barrington. Evidence was offered to show that he was in a highly nervous condition, that his clothing was covered with dirt, and that there was a rent in the sleeve of his trousers. Counsel for Mrs. Mohr offered no objection to the introduction of this testimony regarding Brown's testimony being that the defense are guilty of the murder, but that Mrs. Mohr had no connection with it.

DUDLEY STREET "SURVIVAL OF FITTEST"

The time is not far away when the "Bos" automobiles will make a specialty of running out Washington street to a certain point, steel-ribbed and rambling structure, stopping where the passengers can get a fair view, and the megaphone man will bark as follows:

"On your left, my friends, the celebrated Dudley street terminal. A magnificent tribute to the majority and tolerance of the residents of Dudley street and outlying districts. They go through this mass every night on their way home. War has no terrors for them."

It is worth while to go to Dudley street some day when you don't want to go anywhere else and simply stand by and watch what happens. Dudley street in the rush hours is a place of horrors.

An American reporter took the trip last evening in the red car of a seven-coach train that passed Winter street at 8. The car was filled to capacity. There were the regular portly seated and all available space in the aisle was occupied, but when the stop was made at Dudley street the door slid open and admitted a mass of six women who managed to squeeze into a space which apparently did not exist before they entered.

By the time Dudley street was reached there were sixty-eight passengers standing and forty-eight seated. When the car started with a jerk the human freight was too compact to lose balance and strain had to great use.

A sign overhead announced that all passengers should pass out by the front door, and that the company refused to be responsible for accidents to those making their exit at the rear door. The sign was read by a pattern at the end of a long human wedge with a cynical smile born of knowledge that to reach the centre would require a suse play.

At DUDLEY STREET. Women with arms full of bundles stood as best they could, and a few children were left to sight down among overcoats and furs. The seven coaches held close to eight hundred passengers; and when they unloosed at Dudley street there was a mass scattering for the East and West ends.

The East Deep platform already held a mass of humanity left over from a preceding elevated train and persons who had come up from the lower level. The first thing one noticed about this throng which became almost a mob when the next stream of humanity spilled into it was the worried and anxious look on all faces.

A thousand pairs of eyes scanned the length of track, along which another long car, loaded to find its or her particular.

No sign told where cars were to wait, as at Park street, and there was uncertainty whether the Warren avenue, or the Franklin Park, or the platform car would stop up and take on passengers at one end of the platform, or the other, or somewhere in the middle.

Tall people profited by their ability to see over the heads of others, and in consequence were able to start their sprint toward the goal in advance of the short, who were handicapped by bending their eyes.

Once a car had stopped far up the line and emptied its human freight it came on down the platform preceded by a mass of men and women who intended to be on hand when it stopped to load up for the outward trip. In many cases men and boys like hangers outside the car doors, ready to be the first in when the car stopped and opened to receive its passengers.

FOOTBALL TACTICS. The process of loading one of these elevated cars was an education for persons in quick observation, shrewd guessing as to where it would stop and in football rambles.

A stream of humanity making for one car was sure to pass another at acute angles making for some other car.

The men and women who reached the cars first were sure of seats, while with those who came later it was either a case of being inside where it was warm, with a strap to cling to, or in the vestibule subject to cold drafts whenever the door was opened to allow passengers to leave.

Several starters in uniform shunted rapidly back and forth through the crowd, up and down the platform, calling out the cars and blowing whistles for the grey-way when a car had picked up all the people it could carry, or all there were to ride.

It was observed that the semi-conventible cars and the articulated cars were seldom filled to suffocation. Most of them left with few or none of the passengers standing in the vestibule.

This could not be said of the smaller cars, which with few exceptions left with a jam which in many cases made the journey of some impossibility.

Eight women were seen standing reaching high for straps, and young women were frequently among those who had snatched their car too late for a seat.

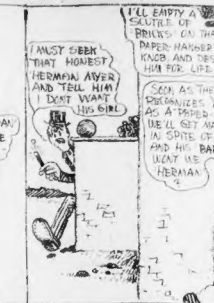

All seemed content, however, to have found any kind of transportation, to some of a place was secured on their car, whether it was a seat or the end of a strap, the worried, anxious expression changed to one either of contentment or resignation.

CONVENIENCE REAPPEARS. No sooner would the platform empty of one throng than another took its place in quick succession.

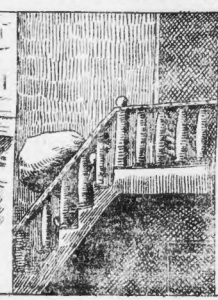

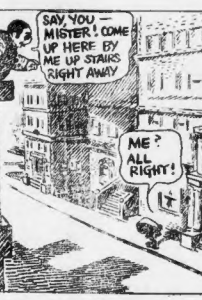

The anxiety was renewed, the confusion reappeared and the muddle back and forward was resumed. Another mass, preceding and flanking the coming car as children accompany the biggest elephant in a circus, carried a portion of the crowd along, while disappointed patrons whose car had not yet appeared formed a restless background.

Among these travelers escape of conversation were occasionally observed which were almost without exception, commented upon some phase of the transportation problem. "I had to go on through this mass to get to my old room, to my late room where we didn't have to ride. There it was, but what the use? The last room for another one."
